Definitely one of the richest resources I've discovered has been the BibleProject. This is a huge array of resources including, regular podcasts on a variety of biblical topics, animated short videos explaining the Bible, Bible classes to join remotely, and lots of well researched respectful writings on the Bible and Christianity. The BibleProject's motto is the Bible as a unified story that leads to Jesus. As someone who spent the majority of my life professing I find their tact on almost every topic not at all scary or offensive. They are not affiliated with a religious denomination, and do not promote anything other than foundational tenets of Christianity as told/shown in the Bible.

Tim Mackie is a favourite bible teacher for me. The Bible Project, with its short videos about each book of the Bible has been a tremendous help to me in understanding the flow of the Bible story and it's real purpose.

I am completely addicted to everything from Tim Mackie. I have learned SO much about the Bible from him! His knowledge of the Bible in the original Hebrew and Greek is so helpful. His podcasts are humble and clear. I love the fact that his primary focus is on Jesus.

Tim Mackie, Jon Collins, and all of the Bible Project resources have deeply resonated with me. Their calm, clear, and compassionate approach to the Bible and the Jesus story is so compelling. They infuse historical and cultural context without making the story dry or pretentious. Their humility about, and passion for, the “upside down kingdom” continues to inspire my desire for learning and enthusiasm in the scriptures.
